Yesterday And Today

Appomattox County . . .

By Paul Ghioto

With spring and the month of June safely behind us, the most "heart-rendering" season of the year has passed. The period no doubt took its toll of emotions as local lovers experienced graduations, engagements, marriages, cross-country moves, summer camp and/or out-of-town work assignments - all designed to help the "heart grow fonder".

Having been recently forced to hear read aloud the contents of a letter written long ago in a complete state of amorous irresponsibility, this writer dug into the files for an appropriate historically-related item. The following letter was written by local resident John Marshall Steptoe in March of 1861 and except for a few names, places and events could have been written yesterday by anyone afflicted with the eternal fever of "love".

"Vita Militia Lucile" exclaims Roman moralist, my dear Hamie, life is a wayfare. Did you know how worse than torture has been my disappointment in seeing your before I left, you would acknowledge that I have had a painful experience of the truth of my quotation that "life is a wayfare". Why was it that things should so happen that you should be from home just at the very time I had succeeded in getting business and the only time that I could have for seeing you. I must confess that before I got to the Depot I had some foreboding that you would not be at home although I knew nothing of the fact that there was to be a second wedding at which you were expected as one of the waiters. I knew the first came off on 13th and that if nothing else detained, you would be absent and that I would have to leave without seeing you, and when I reflect that I had been at home five weeks or more and have seen you only once I am sorely grieved. But circumstances have been such as to make it reasonable and I feel assured that what is reasonable will always find a logement with you. That it is reasonable will appear from these facts -- I had settled down to the belief that I would in virtue of necessity spend my entire Spring and Summer at home and that I would see you frequently and hence thought I would not repeat my visit until after your return from the wedding, but just about the time you left for Liberty I heard of this place and immediately wrote here. A few days afterward I received a reply giving me encouragement to appoint a day when we should meet and have an interview concerning the school, and while I could have appointed a time earlier by four days agreeable to the request of the parties concerned that I should meet them as soon as possible, I declined doing so solely for the purpose of giving you time to get home so that I might see you as it would likely be my only opportunity as I felt certain that I would succeed and am now engaged in my school. The contract was signed last Saturday and Monday I commenced the school. I would have written before but thought it best to give you time to get home, and even now I don't know but that this will find you absent, staying I have determined to run the chances. If you are absent I suppose it will be forwarded without being broken open by Bob or by your sister as mine are frequently done at home in my absence to ascertain whether they require any immediate action. But as you are not in the habit of getting business letters suppose I need entertain no apprehension of this. I am sorry I did not see you as I had my degueeotype and the little knife I promised you. I will not send the degueeotype until I hear from you and know where to send it. I had it taken in a small case such as you requested. My dear Hamie because I have seen you but little don't conclude that I think of you but little, my thoughts of you are my chief source of happiness. Your dear image I carry everyday next to my heart and your sweet letters I read continually, some of which contain sentiments which must come from a heart as noble as it is pure. When I cease to think of you it would be but just that my God should cease to care for me. How did you enjoy yourself at the weddings? much I hope. Did you break the hearts of any the young men, 'Twas cruel if you did wasn't it? How comes the dyspepsia, that cruel, cruel disease. I sincerely hope when you write your can say you are enjoying fine health. Good by, good by, good by, lady that I love, good by.

My P. O. will be Clover Hill, Appomattox Co., Va.

Yours for ever,
Jno. M. Steptoe

Skin Cancer Can Be Cured - If Detected And Treated Early

"This advice," said Dr. O'Brien, "is not only for those who play in the sun, but for those who work in the sun or simply enjoy its warmth for a few vacation weeks every year. It is also for those who have fair skin and light hair or are senior citizens."

Dr. O'Brien noted that the early warning signals of skin cancer are "A sore that does not heal," and "Change of size or color of a wart or mole." He advised, "if you should find a symptom, see your physician as soon as possible. Don't doctor it yourself or hope it will go away. Skin cancer is highly curable if detected and treated in time."

Why not heed the rules of smart sunmanship and make this a happy and healthy summer-under-the-sun? Take the American Cancer Society's advice and make your sunshine cue, "don't overdo!"
